During the 7th Vienna International Summer School on New Social Housing scholars, practitioners, artists and activists will explore the history of housing experiments against the current need for new solutions to social housing. In an era marked by housing shortages, new and changing demands and perplexing housing policies, we aim to delve into the revision of radical experiments, utopias and ideologies of housing that once strived for offering alternative perspectives and solutions.

The Vienna International Summer School on New Social Housing offers an opportunity for young academics and practitioners in the field of housing to learn and share knowledge with leading experts from around the world. The Summer School is organized by the Research Center for New Social Housing as a collaboration of the TU Wien, the University of Vienna and the University of Applied Arts Vienna and is kindly supported by the City of Vienna, Municipal Department 50 - Strategic Projects and International Affairs.
